braries have agrung up in almost every town; as public museums and art galleries have been founded in the larger ones; as historical societies multiply; as our state capital becomes the site of one great public building after another, illustrating splendid architectural effects; as foreign bloods mix with that of native born and to give it new life; our people are more ready in their state civic centers to enter into new public undertakings and to enlarge the field of what are the common benefits and possessions of the whole community.

You in Willimantic feel the inspiration of these influences and I have come here tonight to tell you that the whole state is interested in the success of your undertaking, which this meeting is called to promote. The prosperity of Connecticut is the aggregate prosperity of her towns, cities and mainly of her manufacturing towns and cities. They are hives of industry, there should be honey in the hives. The people and the whole people ought to taste more of the sweets of life. Every new park, every handsome public building or private building, every fine street—all these make life more pleasant to everyone who has eyes to see and a heart to feel. Rome was not built in a day—Willimantic will not be remade in a day. Indeed, she does not need much remaking. The foundations have been well laid; the first story is well up, the work of this association will be to push higher, not to pull down. I congratulate you on the fine municipality here of what in its origin 'a french with what is in its origin 'a french with what is in its origin American. I remember the time towards the close of the last century when 200 years had elapsed since the founding of the town of Windham, of which Willimantic is now so great a part. There was difficulty in getting the public interested in any celebration of the event. The old American stock was cold about it. What happened? There was difficulty in getting the public interested in any celebration of the event. The old American stock was cold about it. What happened? The Roman Catholic priest, who had been a power for good in the town for forty years, determined that the foundation of the original settlement should be properly remembered so far as he could move in that direction. He found a parishioner, a French-Canadian physician, who agreed to give an historical address if the celebration was avranged. He enlisted the support of the teachers in the parochial school; his church-railled about him. They went forward and carried through a celebration of the anniversary when a big procession of school children and suitable historical exercises in which due credit was given to the old Puritan settlers, who stood for the form of religion in which they had put their faith. A year later all Willimantic works up and there was another celebration of the same anniversary, very sood of its kind, except that it came a year after the event. Had this civic federation existed in 1892, there would have been no such series of misunderstandings as marred the event of your bi-centennial.

standings as marred the event of your bi-centennial.

Connecticut has a proud history. She looks forward to a proud future. Her soms are more and more realizing that it is their part to advance the prosperity of their state as well as of their family. We are all the one family of the state. In each of her civic committees all are members of the one family of the community. Let us all honer and cultivate this family. It is twice blessed. It leads to the promotion of public good and it leads to the promotion of public good and it leads to the promotion of our own good; it takes us out of the narrow circle of self; it is a good thing for us, for the expansion of our hearts, our whole powers. Whenever we unite with others, in doing something to make the town we live in a better town, for all to live in, that is the work of this civic association and I am glad to be here to bid it Godspeed. May it have long years of active infinence before it. It will if you here do your duty as citizens of Willimantic.

it. It will if you here do your duty as citizens of Willimantic.

There was loud applause as the governor concluded his address.

Judge Arnold then introduced Supt. of Schools F. H. Beade of New Haven, a former principal of this city. Mr. Beade outlined the work which the civic movement has done in New Haven and told the part that the school children of the Elm city took in the movement there. He explained the various ways in which the school may become a power for good along such lines. He cited the lifustation of the school city and its government in its various phases. He alluded to the inception of the civic movement that was first inaugurated in New Haven by a clean up week before Easter, 1905. School children everywhere, he said, can do a great deal of good in the community, and only those to be taught to have an interest in their respective towns and cities and their future welfare.
